

SHOW PRESIDENT IS LOSS TO THE EQUESTRIAN WORLD

The committee of the Scottish Horse Show was shocked and saddened to learn of the passing of its President, John Milligan on 30 January 2012. John was a well-known judge and breeder of quality ponies at the family's Roseisle Stud in the Scottish Borders.

John played an instrumental role in keeping the Scottish Horse Show alive after a significant period of decline and despite increasing ill-health did all that he could to attend the show each year. The thoughts and condolences of the Committee are extended to his family at this sad time.

Speaking about this news, Show Chairman Tweetie Nimmo said, "John was an esteemed judge and breeder for many decades and his influence on pony breeding in this country and abroad is immeasurable. Many of today's leading ponies will have Roseisle blood somewhere in their ancestry, which is a fitting tribute to a life's dedication."
